UWF NAMED TOP MILITARY-FRIENDLY INSTITUTION

PENSACOLA – The December edition of Military Advanced Education (MAE) has named the University of West Florida to its “2008 Top Military Friendly Colleges and Universities” list. Selection was conducted by an independent panel of judges from the fields of education and the military. Selections were based on each institution’s favorable policies toward men and women in uniform.

The publication invited more than 2,000 colleges and universities to participate and only 60 schools received the honor.

UWF is a 10,000-student, regionally accredited public institution rated “A Best Southeastern College” by The Princeton Review. Fully online programs are offered in 24 different areas including undergraduate teacher education, health sciences and information engineering technology. Graduate offerings include administration (rated an online best buy), computer science, human performance technology, instructional technology, teacher education and public health. A dedicated military support team stands ready to assist with access to affordable and flexible degree programs.

MAE is the only magazine produced specifically for service members seeking to take advantage of the military education benefit. It covers issues and trends in distance learning and education as they specifically relate to military life, including innovative programs, military educational policy, financial aid and coursework that offer special opportunities for military personnel.
